A Tamil Nadu bill to probe alleged organ theft has been referred to a Select Committee. (TOI photo by Alaric De Souza) The Tamil Nadu government on Thursday moved a bill in the state Assembly to change the legal procedure to refer cases involving organ transplants to special courts. State Health Minister C Vijayabaskar sought the support of Opposition party members for the bill which seeks to replace the existing organ transplantation (prevention and control of human organ trafficking and illegal trade) Act in the state by the Union Transplantation of Human Organs (Prevention and Control of Human Organ Trafficking and Illegal Trade) Act, 2016. The bill was tabled by Mr Vijayabaskar on the second day of the Vidhan Sabha session. Mr Vijayabaskar said that the present legislation was not sufficient to deal with the issue and the proposed law will provide direction for state agencies to deal with the issue. He said the issue of organ trafficking was of great concern as several lives are being lost daily. "Several people across the state have been excluded from organ transplantation as they were not known to the donor and his relative. A major factor is that a disreputable and fraudulent organ sale culture is accepted and unknown to our society. Organ transactions are controlled by gangs and this aspect needs to be looked into as these organ sales are in violation of law," said the Health Minister. The existing act does not have provisions for providing a punishment for such offences. This bill, he said, provides for under
